Digital transcripts get smarter New product will improve productivity with better integration

Houston, TX, June 2, 2006 — OMTI, Inc., developer of ReporterBase, the country's number one best-selling office management software for court reporting firms, announces the development of a new product line, "smart" digital transcripts.

Currently under development, RB digital transcripts will be the first digital transcripts that are integrated into a court reporting firm's production and billing software. As an integrated part of the production and billing workflow, RB digital transcripts will already "know" a lot of the related information, such as case and billing information, that current transcript solutions do not. As a result, RB offices will not have to re-enter information from their RB systems into transcripts, which saves time and reduces errors.

RB digital transcripts will include all of the popular transcript features that the ReporterBase community has been requesting. And like all ReporterBase products, it will include some technological improvements over existing transcript solutions.

RB digital transcripts will be presented for the first time at the upcoming Team RB Conference. The fourth annual Team RB Conference, which showcases technology and best business practices for legal support businesses, is scheduled to take place October 13-14 in Houston, TX.

For over 20 years, OMTI has provided office management software for court reporting firms, records retrieval companies, and other legal support businesses. ReporterBase legal support firm software is the number one best-selling office management software for court reporting firms in the country. RB8's companion online offices product, RB Web 8, offers legal support firms the ability to customize their web services to their businesses while integrating closely with their in-house office management system.
