

Offering clients additional peace of mind

Did you ever have a client ask if your MR Web site is SSL-certified?

Secure Sockets Layer (SSL) is a common protocol used for managing secure exchanges of information over the Internet. It's commonly used for e-commerce to protect your sensitive personal information when purchasing through an online store. You can usually tell that a site is secured this way because the web address will begin with "https" instead of "http," and a gold lock icon is displayed somewhere on the browser frame.

MR Web data is protected and passwords are encrypted, but if a client makes it a requirement that you additionally apply an SSL certificate to your site, you can now offer them the assurance of trusted third-party validation of your MR Web site.

Adding an SSL certificate to your site yourself and maintaining it could cost from a couple of hundred dollars to over a thousand dollars annually. Plus the less expensive certificates don't have any name recognition, so you might have to go with a more expensive brand, such as Verisign, to appease your clients.

A simple, convenient solution

For MR Web subscribers, however, we now include top quality SSL certification. With this certification, you automatically get trusted third-party validation of your MR Web site identity by Comodo, whose SSL certificates are trusted by 99.3% of all web browsers.

This new feature is automatically included in MR Web. Most lawyers won't ask for this additional security, but some firms, especially those with their own IT department, might. With our secure site feature, you can quickly satisfy this requirement, assuring all of your clients that their transcripts, repository and other online information is on an SSL-certified site.

Automatically included

SSL certification is included in every MR Web site. You don't have to do anything.
