New mobile app for court reporting agencies
Court reporting agencies can meet clients where they spend more of their time

Houston, TX, March 10, 2011 — OMTI Inc., developer of ReporterBase, the country's number one best-selling office management software for court reporting firms, announces a new service: RB Web Mobile Apps for providing services over smartphones.

Court reporting agencies can offer their own time-saving app that gives clients access to their important information, such as their depo schedule, transcripts, case files, and invoices, on their smartphones. The app is branded with the agency's name and logo making it easy for clients to find, download and use it.

More and more people, including agency clients like lawyers, are using smartphone business and productivity apps in their working lives, and it's easy to see why: Mobile apps give people instant access to their information. They don't have to carry around a laptop, wait for a computer to boot up, type in a long URL or deal with a secure site timing out.

 "With many law firms downsizing their physical space to save money, some lawyers don't even have an office anymore," said Yong Lee, president and CEO of OMTI. "Court reporting agencies need to meet clients on the clients' own turf, so we developed these apps as a way for agencies to provide important services where their clients can access them easily."

Court reporting agency clients, such as attorneys, paralegals and secretaries, can use these apps on their smartphones to view their transcripts and other case files. They can look up their scheduled depositions and get detailed information, including driving directions to the location. They can also review their invoices, payment history and current outstanding amounts owed to the agency. And if their agency has a reward points program, they can track their reward points and make requests to redeem or transfer points.

Agency resources, such as reporters, videographers, interpreters and sales reps can also use their agency's RB Web Mobile App to check their schedule, get driving directions to a location, view case files and check their pay statements and outstanding amounts owed to them.

RB Web Mobile Apps are currently available for iPhone and Android. Versions for BlackBerry and Windows Phone 7 are coming this spring. Details about RB Web Mobile Apps are available on our website: http://www.omti.com/rb/.
